This book takes you through the follies of a boy, who slowly and belatedly evolves into manhood, long after a frivolous adolescence. The story begins during The Great Depression of the 1930's and continues with the traumas the boy experienced as an "instant" and inept ranch hand during the manpower shortage of World War II. His adventures continue at the University he attends where the ratio of men to women is 5 to 1. After graduation he proceeds to military service, travels, studies in Mexico, and finally settles into a happy marriage with children. But the marital bliss he has enjoyed eventually collapses and he has to meet the challenge of single parenting. After his kids grow up and leave home, he takes up hiking, skiing and climbing in the mountains, which leads to more mishaps and adventures. Each generation is different, and these accounts reflect the life and times from about 1930, and some contrast to our present mode of living. Although some fictional writing techniques are used, the author has strived to record these true accounts as accurately as his imperfect memory would allow.
