Shalina and the King of the Mountain: A Short Story Sarah Walker

Shalina has married the wrong man. He stole her dolphins, kidnapped her brothers, and is carrying enough bounty funds to purchase a small nation. The bounty has her name on it, and the only man with that much money lives in the place Shalina's family has fled from...the swamp. Now she's running with a man who's insufferable, and she's given her heart to another who plans to save her brothers. Marco can't believe God is draping him in woman. A wild filly who smells like roses and blood and can dance as a woman ought. Shalina's got trouble in both fists. She fights like a man and has enough sass to survive almost any situation. Except the swamp. Now she's pulling him back into his past life, where legends whisper his name. He will have to travel to the Isle of Night and dance with Mama Possum to get her brothers back. But in the heat of the evening with dark hair draped over his heart, he whispers the old song of both their families. This is it, boys, this is war...this is what we're fighting for. Throw courage in and reach for more. 'Cause I'm the king of the mountain.
