The Unmistakable Scent of Gardenias (Haunted Hearts) (Volume 6) Denise Moncrief

The sixth book in the Haunted Hearts series takes the reader to the Great River Road along the bayous of south Louisiana and onto the streets of the French Quarter in New Orleans. The journey begins at the abandoned Wakefield Plantation near Vacherie, Louisiana... Content with the direction her life takes... The temptation to earn a sweet payday and collect enough money to start her own interior design business is too much opportunity for Sophia Cannon to ignore, but working for her new client, Les Wakefield, is like working for a creepy stalker. He seems to be everywhere she goes. Until trouble walks around the corner and into her life again... Dylan Hunter almost turns down the Wakefield Manor restoration job until Les Wakefield tells him Sophia is the interior designer hired to oversee furnishing the old plantation house. Sophia has been the ghost in his life since the day she left him, haunting his heart with her memory every day and every night. Stirring up more than just the spirits of the dead... Sophia and Dylan fight with each other until a much bigger threat puts both their lives in danger. Discovering that generations of Wakefields have restored the plantation only to disappear months after moving into the manor house stirs up spirits that would rather remain undisturbed. Can love survive the long nights at Wakefield Manor with the unmistakable scent of gardenias hanging so heavily in the air?
