It's 2016 A.D. Retired sheriff's detective J.D. Welch and his wife, Ann, have been nomadic fugitives for nearly five years. They're trying to stay ahead of a team of jihadis who intend to kill them, in revenge for Welch having foiled part of a Muslim terror plot. By the way, the ex-cop killed three soldiers of Allah during his private investigation into their sex slavery operation. The imam mastermind behind the original plan intends to make him pay for those lost lives. But first he has to find the elusive ex-cop. The terrorists kidnap two of Ann's family members and hold them hostage – to be released only if Welch and his wife surrender themselves for what is sure to be a most horrible execution. Set in a United States that has become the epicenter of World War IV, the last great struggle between the forces of Islam and Karl Marx's ideology, the couple must travel a perilous route from Idaho to Texas – where certain death awaits them. To get there, they have to go through the war zone, where pitched battles have already erupted between the two warring factions. It's going to be a very rough ride.
